A Street Cat named Bob

James Bowen is a homeless man and former drug addict living on the streets of London with little money. His support worker manages to get him a council flat and on his first night there he is befriended by a cat he calls Bob who then keeps following James into town and turns him into somewhat of a celebrity.

James (often with Bob on his shoulder) subsequently suffers many obstacles including a negligent father, street ruffians and methadone withdrawal before eventually becoming drug free and an internet and media personality
